While summertime is the season when coastal dwellers revel in the sun, the ensuing autumn brings an influx of beach-bound vacationers, and for those who are lucky enough to be able to stay in their homes, it's the perfect time to throw open the doors and windows and enjoy the fall season. Perhaps your seaside home happens to have been built years ago, before fresh air and sunshine were issues. Or maybe you're so lucky as to have a brand new house, and you haven't had the opportunity to enjoy the outdoors. That's why it's essential to take advantage of your autumn vacation, and in this post, we'll be presenting some of the best homes around the country for your consideration. The homes featured in this post were selected by a panel of experts, and each has something special to offer in terms of its location, design and functionality. Follow us on social media Oceanfront Villa with Butternut Kitchen Resting on the waterfront of North Hampton, Massachusetts, this vacation home combines both beachfront living and a location-worthy property with a sunny and open layout. The interior features a graceful blend of old and new, with a light, airy feel thanks to the architect's quest for natural light and use of clear glass. The kitchen sports Butternut appliances and granite countertops, while the space between the living and dining rooms features a wide window which lets in plenty of fresh air. One of the things that sets the home apart from other vacation homes in the area is its waterfront location. While the facade of the home is traditional with windows set in a two-story clapboard, the interior is more contemporary. The open layout of the living and dining areas is offset by tall, clear glass windows that fill the space with natural light. A semi 82157476af
